A History of Amakusa’s Christianity

Christianity was introduced into Japan in 1566 by Portuguese missionaries, spread quickly over the country and flourished in Amakusa, too. However, Edo government announced the prohibition of Christianity in 1614 and persecution for Christians got severe in Amakusa too. Christians were also suffered from continuous severe collection of land tax, they raised a riot (Shimabara-Amakusa Ikki) against Edo government in 1637. After this incident,

Edo government made prohibition for Christianity stricter, however, Christians in Amakusa preserved their religious faith covertly. In 1873, an official bulletin board of the prohibition for Christianity was removed and severe period for Japanese Christians was over. Oe Catholic Church and Sakitsu Catholic Church were built in 1933 and 1934, religious belief is still preserved by locals in various regions of Amakusa.
